Aebelwulf the Bloody, the Thane of Hathersage Age 46

Aebelwulf is a stocky man with long ash blond hair, blue eyes, and a large braided beard. He was raised as a boy in Winchester, the capital of Alfred the Great. Aebelwulf was born in the swamp fort at Athelney in Sussex where the Great King had retreated to marshal his forces to attack the heathen host. His father, Eadberht, served the King and in those days helped gather warriors, later serving in Aethelflaed's personal guard. Aebelwulf's mother, Aethelgifu, was a close friend of Alfred's wife Ealhswith and often spoke of the great lady's frustration at never being named queen.

Aebelwulf was married, at age 17, to Ealhwaru, a younger daughter of Osmund, a household trooper of the then Aetheling Edward. His wife gave birth to 2 sons, Aebelwulf the Younger and Wymond, and a daughter, Lufu. His elder son, Aebelwulf the Younger, was killed in the campaign of 918 while serving in King Edward's army under Hrodgar, a thane of Mercia to whom he'd been fostered. Wymond has become an accomplished ship captain and serves the crown from London patrolling the River Thames and the sea. Lufu married, Kedric a Thane of Sussex, and remains happily married raising a brood of children. Aebelwulf is well known in the region and is considered a grizzled veteran.

During the action around Tamworth in 913, Aebelwulf put to sword a handful of Danes who were in the midst of ravishing a farmer's several daughters after having tortured the parents in search of loot. Aebelwulf hanged the leader, Dagny the Elder, from a tree and watched him bleed to death after having put the rest to the sword. He gave no mercy to the band, left the heads of the men impaled upon stakes as a warning to others, and has been known as the bloody ever since. He is thane of the Hathersage, a village of scattered farms, numerous cattle herds, and 2 quarries that provide millstones and the like. His wife, Ealhwaru, manages the estate with an iron hand. Their marriage is a practical arrangement lacking passion.
